

British Airways increases spring frequencies to popular destinations

British Airways is adding more flights to some of its most popular destinations in the US and South Africa from April.

The airline will be increasing its services from Heathrow to Miami, Seattle and Cape Town, offering those customers who want to travel during the busy spring period more flexibility.

Cape Town will increase by three services a week from 30 March until 19 April, Seattle will increase by a daily service from 1 until 31 May and Miami will increase by a daily service from 1 April to 31 May 2020.

Neil Chernoff, British Airways Director of Network and Alliances, said; "We know that these destinations in the US and Africa are highly sought after, particularly during Spring, so we are pleased to be able to offer more flights to these destinations for our customers who are looking to get away."

British Airways recently announced that it would be increasing services next winter from Gatwick to Cape Town, St Lucia and Cancun. The airline will also be launching six new European routes starting from July from Heathrow to Greece, Italy, Kosovo, Montenegro and Turkey.
